A Note Regarding the Following Comic

"The Big Bad Wolf Club" contains a story line with BDSM themes. Please note that every attempt has been made by the author and artist to demonstrate situations where safety comes first. It is vitally important that every participant in a BDSM scene understand a few important safety notes.

You are Only Playing: No matter what the situation is, always remember that what you are doing is supposed to be for enjoyment. This is a game. This is not a real situation. BDSM scenes should never revolve around "real events" like your partner scratching the family car resulting in a beating. Experienced individuals who use a "no limits" system still understand that there are always limits. Never allow BDSM to turn into partner/spousal abuse.

The Safeword: Combined with the theory of you are only playing, there must be a definitive way for one partner to express an immediate desire to stop playing. "Oh, no, please, don't, stop" can be interpreted wrong. Suddenly screaming "BANANA!" at the top of your lungs puts out a clear message, assuming that you discussed the safeword to be "banana" before playing. If you are the "top" in the situation, immediately tend to the "bottom." Something is very wrong, and you must fix it immediately. Cease all play.

Communication: In our comic, we are using a fantasy situation where there is no negotiation of the play to take place before start. This should never be done in real life. Many partners have medical problems. You do not want to start beating your partner's ass only to discover they just had hemorrhoid surgery the day before. (In that case, the bottom is pretty stupid for letting it happen.) Communication is vital. Discuss what you want to do before you start playing. Surprise is good, but when it comes with risk of life or limb, the police won't care if you were "just playing."

Stay in Your Experience Level: BDSM play can be fun. However, you should always keep safety in mind. If you have never participated in a scene where the "bottom" is suspended (from the ceiling, cage, rafters, whatever), find someone who has done that before. Invite them to play. (It's a good way to make friends.) Get tips and pointers from experienced friends. Unhealthy situations can occur with bondage, use of insertable toys, suspension, electrical gear, sounds, etc. Be careful. If you don't know what it does, ask.

Communication: Yes, we mentioned this already. Continue talking with your partner during the scene (or moaning with the ball gag in there.) If something goes wrong, the bottom has the prime responsibility to notify the top. The top cannot know when something is pinching/pulling/ripping! You are entirely responsible for this information. It's your body; protect it.

BDSM play can be a fun and exciting sexual and mental experience. However, with all "edge play" situations, play safe. Talk to your partner. Remember the safeword system. Get help from others when you are inexperienced. And, remember, you're just playing. This is not real life.
